"Ever since I can remember," wrote [Name], "I have always loved to sing but was never very good at it until I joined the choir at my university."

"I entered college," wrote [Name], "and am unafraid to use my God-given talents," wrote [Name], "and have made a significant contribution to the music department at my university."
Ottawa 3,800 students were inducted into Sigma Beta Delta this past year, our highest number ever. These outstanding individuals bring our loyal membership past the 60,000 mark as we also recognize new inductee students for achieving excellence in their academic year.

Our primary mission is to provide national honor society recognition to highly capable business students in our chapters representing 60 states and one international country. If you know a college or university which offers degree programs in business or management that does not offer business honor society recognition to its outstanding students, please tell us about it soon and we will make contact with them.

We joined our sister honor society Delta Mu Delta in holding both organizational conventions. This year's annual meetings were held at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. Our organizations share a commitment to serving business students. The conventions, with a theme of “Business Without Borders,” included student presentations by leaders with extensive global business experience.

Dr. Donald Drimeier of the University of Missouri-St. Louis, our new President, is a former Sigma Beta Delta student during his tenure on the Board. We greatly appreciate their outstanding service to the Society.
